The Inaugural Address

The Fourth of March has come and gone.

There is not in the whole address one ray light-one gleam of hope that the new President and his constitutional advisers will do the Union. The Inaugural will have a most irritating effect upon the people of the States that have already seconded; it will strengthen sionists, and if the policy it indicates is pursued, It will cause the Border Slave States one after another, to leave the Union. Such is the feast-such the banquet to which this Republican Administration invites the American

It then put the question: "Is the gural of the new President would propose some Republican party to succumb to the minority?" men-not a syllable to stay the tide of secession that Is sweeping over the more Northern Slave

There is no sentiment—no proposition in the while it dwells largely upon the duty of rigidly regards the festering of a fraternal spirit and alleying the secession mania, the Inaugural might be appropriately headed with the motto that has for weeks, in flaming capitals, preceded the fiery editorials in the New York Tri-

The greatest living patriots and statesmen have recommended amendments to the Constitution as the only sure remedy for existing evils, and the only certain guarantee for the reconstruction and preservation of the Union ---Bat Mr. Lincoln, having the fear of the radioals before his eyes, dare "make no recommen dation of amendments." This point he guards with a watchful care, only penturing to hipt that in case the people should require amend-ments, he would prefer, of the two constitutional modes, the more circuitous and protracted one, requiring the interposition of a National

Mr. Lincoln thinks that "no administration by any extreme wickedness or folly, can very seriously injure the Government in the short space of four years." This is indubitable evidence, if not of "extreme wickedness," at least of "extreme foliz,"—a folly which, it is to be feared, will characterize the new Administration, and in a less space than four years per-manently dismember the Government, and in-volve the country in civil war. Such is the outlook from this Inappural Address. We must be prepared for the worst that our fears have

We have thought that Mr. BOOMANAN ANDER with him on that point; thus forbidding that free exercise of intelligent investigation, and that right of private judgment, which should be tolerated at all times, without bringing the citisen into conflict with the Court, or subjecting him to the charge of disloyalty or disobedience to the jadgment of the highest judicial tribunal in the

Mr. Buonanan's teachings on this subject were not in accordance with the doctrine laid down by Gen. Jackson, as we think; and to his pertinacity in pressing his views on the Democratic party, much of the difficulty in which our rganization was involved, during the last two years of his administration, may be traced.

But what shall be said of the views of Mr. Lincoln on this subject? He has gone to the other extreme, and would by his doctrine reduce the Supreme Court of the United States to a very low point indeed, with scarcely as much authority as we have been accustomed to accord to the decisions of a Justice of the Peace in the State of Ohio. Such quackery as he exhibits in his reference to that grave tribunal, in his control of the state of Ohio. Inaugural, is beneath contempt. He exalts the he would go in the case of the Supreme Court. the resolutions of the Chicago Platform as "law" to the Republicans and to himself.

What Does it Mean !

When Mr. LINCOLN took leave of his friends at Springfield, on the 12th February, he took care to tell them that he felt and realized his inability to perform the great work before him, unless assisted by Divine aid. Keeping this fact in view, he assured the people at every point in view, he assured the people at every point on his route from Springfield to Harrisburg, that of himself he could do nothing, but by the aid of the American people and the Almighty he felt that he could not fail.

At Harrisburg this confidence in Almighty Power happened to fail him, and for the time below to the game ha. Agriculture.

The Effect of the American Paule on Freights

Freights from Liverpool to New-York were never so low as they now are. In the article of iron, freights average from 9a. to 10s. They been as high as 17s. and as low as 8s -Now, however, offers are freely made by ship owners to carry fron to America for 3s. a ton.— This rate applies to what the shipping agents now, for the first time, denominate "undamage-able" fron. Damageable fron, such as sheets and hoops, which are unfavorably affected by oxidation, are to be charged 5s a ton. There is little doubt, however, that all manufactured iron, whether damageable or undamageable, will be soon carried at the 3s. rate, for within the past week the freight of damageable iron has been reduced 1s. a ton. Computing the distance from Liverpool to New-York at 3,000 miles, iron may now be carried across the Atlantic at 1s. per ton per 1,000 miles.
